Not illustrated. 1872 Excerpt: .side, for such an aquarium will be a hundred times richer in those spontaneous growths we have already spoken of, and visible forms of infusoria and true zoophytes will abound, and every class will be more fully represented, down even to the twilight monad. Though this paper must have an end, there is no end to the teaching of the aquarium. It is a watery microcosm of living and dead wonders, and we need not marvel that the balance of life and death may be observed in its succession of changes, because all the physical forces of the universe are locked up within a single bead of dew, and all the functions of organic creation are comprised in the economy of monas termo. If God so ordains that life shall be constantly soaring from the tomb, if the story of the Phoenix ceases to be a fable, need man, the victim of doubts and fears, ever fail in his trust of that blessed promise, that this mortal shall pat on immortality, and this corruptible shall put on incorruption? Science may fix his mind on the appreciation of God s wisdom and power as he reads the handwriting of the Almighty in Nature, but through faith in another revelation must he hope to exclaim, triumphantly, O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Or, to pass from divine to human consolations, we may taKe up the apostrophe of the great Raleigh, and...
