What s the connection between an elderly businessman who s been stabbed to death on the streets of Amsterdam and three lovely Dutch expatriates living as housewives in Dublin? That s the central question of The Lovely Ladies and it s one that extends into a fascinating mystery in the finest Freeling tradition. Intelligent and realistic mystery with well-written characters. The elderly man was killed in the market place in Amsterdam, just as Inspector Van der Valk was going past. It was assumed, at first, that he d been run over, but Van der Valk found the handle of an antique dagger emerging from the man s old-fashioned waistcoat and said to the crowd, This is a death by violence; you may have witnessed an assassination. Directly you have given your names to the officers, you may go home. Please be at home tonight: an officer will call to interview you. The dead man was identified as F.-X. Martinez. Van der Valk went to see Mrs. Martinez. She was younger than her husband, much younger. She called her husband Vaderfather. But it was Martinez s real daughters the girls that Van der Valk had to see. Lotte he didn t see, she lived in Venezuela, but the others Agnes, Agatha, Anastasia, the ladies of Belgrave Square, Dublin they were the ones he saw. Because, in part, of Senator Terence Lynch Irish and a most prominent figure Van der Valk was told to proceed to Dublin. You speak English, I suppose ? he was asked. I can just barely make myself understood, he said. That s all that s needed, he was told. And if was all, or almost all that was needed. This...
